Thanks Danny. Attached, you can find various screenshots from the Port Authority 2015 budget with relevance to police officers or airport security. In short, we would like to know how many police officers/supervisors are budgeted for LaGuardia and JFK. If it would be more accurate to request the budgeted number for the Port Authority Police Department rather than New York Police Department officers, please process this request that way (or I can resubmit this with clarifying language). Essentially we are just seeking the total positions number.

Thanks again,

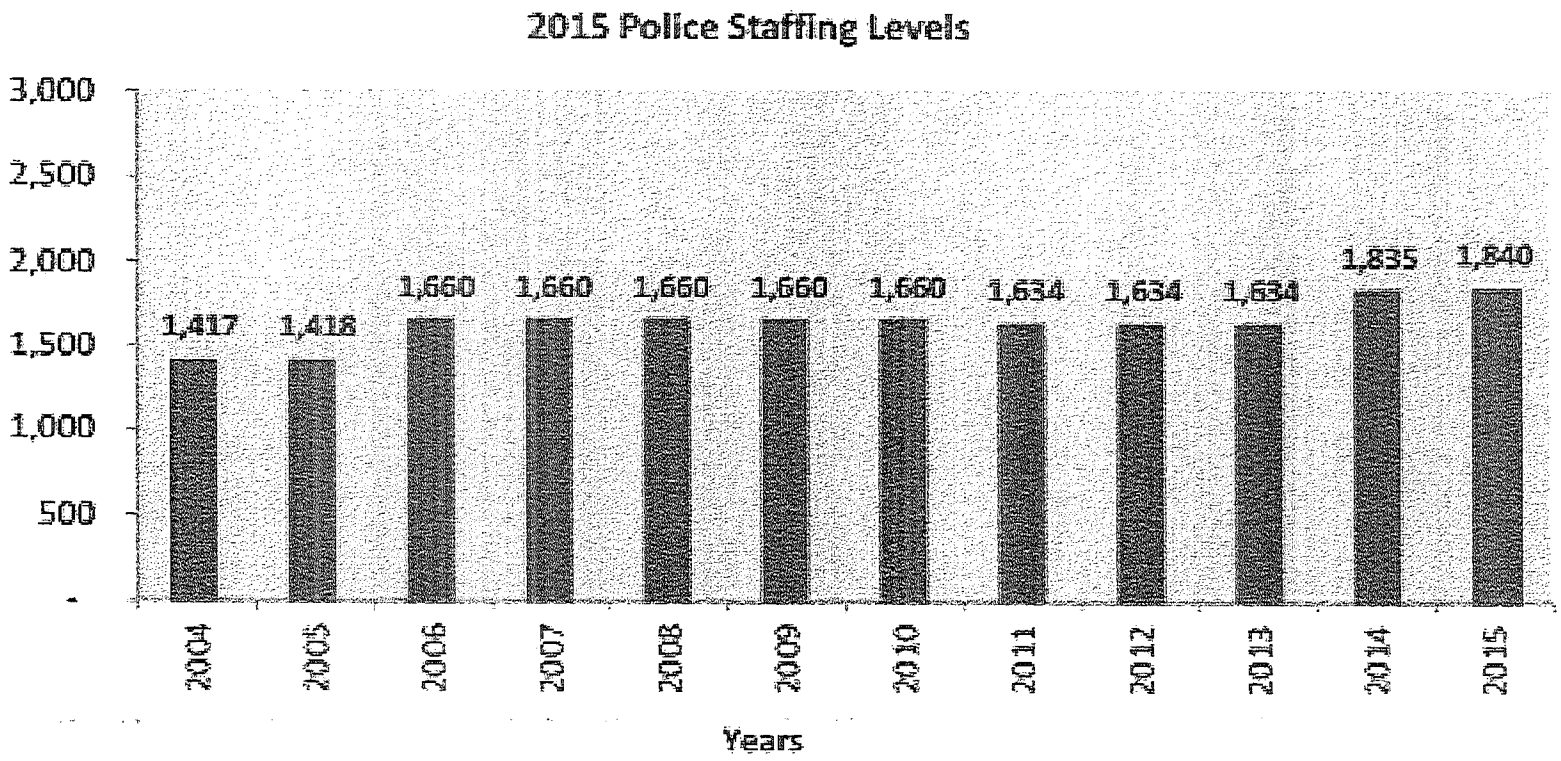
Security Business Resource Management, WTC Security, the Office of Emergency Management, as well as Line Department security management. In addition to the consolidation of existing security functions, the CSO has instituted new security management disciplines to enhance critical infrastructure protection, security policy and planning, intelligence, quality assurance and inspections, cyber security, and security technology and communications. Under this new structure, the Port Authority's security and safety posture will be further enhanced through consistency and collaboration across the agency's business lines. In 2014, the agency increased the police workforce to manage workload and reduce overtime. Over four hundred new recruits graduated from two police classes.



The PAPD provides a multitude of services to protect millions of patrons and commuters that use Port Authority facilities and services, as well as the training and execution of firefighting and crash emergency rescue at Port Authority airports and for all other aircraft emergency incidents. As security concerns have risen since 9/11, so has the police force. Since then, the agency maintained a police force of over 1,600 uniformed officers. In 2014, FAA-mandated reforms led to the formation of a stand-alone new unit solely responsible for Airport Rescue and Fire Fighting (ARFF). This FAA reform, in combination with an effort to mitigate overtime,
