

One World Observatory: Stunning Views of New York Unseen Since 9/11

One World Observatory

The top of the world is back! Port Authority officials unveiled on April 2, 2013 the stunning view from the top of One World Trade Center, a 360-degree eagle's eye panorama that will instantly become one of the city's premiere tourist attractions when it is completed in 2015. The deck showcases one of the greatest views of New York City - and one that hasn't been seen since 9/11. Take a look at the Big Apple from the brand new observation deck

One World Observatory

"The best view in the world will be restored like the building," said David Samson, chairman of the Port Authority. Here, the breathtaking view from the observatory is unveiled for the first time on April 2, 2013.

One World Observatory

The unrivaled view from the One World Observatory will do more than give visitors a view of the Big Apple - it will also heal some wounds. "Just like the rejuvenation of lower Manhattan after 9/11, this building will rise and be a symbol to the world of New York City's might and capabilities," said David Samson, chairman of the Port Authority.

One World Observatory

Port Authority Chairman David Samson spoke on April 2, 2013 while unveiling the new One World Observatory at the top of One World Trade Center.

One World Observatory

Boat traffic in the Hudson River can be observed from the top of One World Trade Center. The view was snapped for the first time on April 2, 2013.