

City Marks 21 Years Since World Trade Center Bombing

The victims of the first attack on the World Trade Center were remembered Wednesday during a memorial ceremony at the site.

The event marked the 21st anniversary of the 1993 bombing that killed six people and injured more than a thousand others.

Held at the 9/11 Memorial fountain, the service opened with the Port Authority Pipes and Drums.

Following a moment of silence, the names of those who died will be read aloud by one of their family members.

"I was 18. I remember I was in college right across the river at Stevens and I could see all the helicopters and smoke," said Steven Knapp, whose father was killed in the attacks.

"She was a very happy girl, very enthusiastic, very... She loved life. She was a very happy woman. Couldn't wait to have a child. Didn't happen," said Ernie Rodriguez, whose sister was killed in the attacks.

Six people were convicted of setting off a truck bomb inside a parking garage underneath the towers.

One of the bombers, Ramzi Yousef, is the nephew of self-proclaimed September 11th mastermind Khalid Sheikh Mohammed.
